

Student Consumer Information

The Higher Education Opportunity Act of 2008 requires that colleges make available to current and prospective students essential information concerning each institution's academic programs, retention rates, graduation rates, crime reports, financial aid procedures, and more to better inform higher education consumers.

The Higher Education Act protects the consumer's right to know important facts about each institution's students services, student success metrics, campus safety and security, the cost to attend and other information needed to make fully informed choices when selecting colleges and universities.

It is the college's hope that the centralization of this information makes it easier for prospective students, enrolled students, and their families to access the information they need to make the best possible decisions.

For additional information about Albany Technical College and a comparison to other institutions of higher education, please see the College Navigator website maintained by the U.S. Department of Education. This site contains useful information about more than 7,000 institutions of higher learning in the United States, including Albany Technical College.

Gainful Employment

Albany Technical College has opted to early implement the rescission of Gainful Employment Regulations published in 2014. The college officially implemented this rescission on July 15, 2019.
